AN AUTUMN MEMORY.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.
BY VANDYKE BROWN.

I do not know why, on this day,
In mellow-hued October,
My thoughts should turn—do what I may—
To fancies sad and sober.

The world is in a merry mood,
The skies are blue above me,
The air is wine and life is good,
And friends I have to love me.

And treading these familiar ways
With Autumn's glory round me,
Why is it that I still must raise
Dark doubts that but confound me?

Why is it now, when days reveal
New beauties without measure,
I gaze on all, yet cannot feel
One thrill of old-time pleasure?

I see with eyes that brighten not
The wealth of Autumn splendor,
But in my soul are now begot
No longings fond and tender.

The mellow air, the sunshine's gold,
The trees with crimson burning—
These—these return, but for the old,
Fond hope there's no returning!

Ah, well! what reck it though we tread
The very fields Elysian,
If memories of a love that's dead
Still rise before our vision?

No heaven can be where love is not—
O truth, how simply given!—
And so with love, the lowliest cot
May be a perfect heaven.

In such a strain I reasoned once,
And she, who stood and listened,
First sighed, then smiled, while I, poor dunc,
Believed the eyes that glistened!

Believed! then when, in whispers low,
She said that love's vast treasures
Were more to her than worldly show,
Or wealth, or soulless pleasures.

For love was deathless if returned—
Ah! well she knew the story!—
And while she spoke her fair face burned
With more than Autumn's glory!

And but a year has passed since then—
Where can the time have tarried?
A single year, yet she has been
Three months, to-morrow, married!

'Twas here we stood, a year ago,
In mellow-hued October.
Ah! well—I fancy now I know
Why 'tis my thoughts are sober.

UNCLE JOHNNIE'S CIRCUS.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.
BY DWIGHT BALDWIN.

Yes, young man, you've called the turn. I'm Sam Hopkins, and I'm the oldest showman in America. I say this, knowing my well that P. T. Barnum, Dewitt Talmage and R. B. Hayes are all alive and active in the ring. I folded my tent and stole away from the seductive sawdust five-and-thirty years ago, so it's only the oldest of the old boys who remembers "Sam Hopkins' Circus."

I made my start in New England, but went South in '34, and never afterwards showed north of the Ohio. Those were the gay-days. To have seen the circus in its glory, me boy, you should have lived half a century ago. They have what they call combinations now, and travel by rail, with the electric light, steam band and three-card-monte attachments; but they don't meet with the regal receptions of the olden time. Why, when my circus and menagerie struck a town forty years ago, it meant a holiday—the same as a hanging—to everybody, from the dirty-faced schoolboy to the Judge on the bench. I've known men to sell their cookstove, shotgun and dog to buy a family-ticket.

Showing in those days was a hard and yet an exciting life, full of adventure and sport. Why, a book as big as a family Bible, chock full of funny experiences, wouldn't make a respectable side-show to the vast numbers I've encountered.

The funniest thing that ever happened to me I never told. I've always been sore about it, for it drove me from the State and from the ring a ruined, bankrupted man; but you shall hear if you care to listen.

In March, 1848, I was showing in New Orleans; I had a first-class circus, a good menagerie and a great side-show—I beg your pardon, annex is the modern word—and was doing a rousing business. One day, between the afternoon and evening performances, an old gentleman called on me at the St. Charles, introduced himself as John Barker of Copiah County, Mississippi, and requested a few minutes' conversation with me. As I eyed him over my heart swelled with professional pride and the hope of gain. Here was a winning card, worth a fortune to me. He was the fattest fat man I had ever seen. Not over six feet six, he could not have weighed less than six hundred pounds. He was a treasure.

"I called to see if I couldn't make an arrangement with you to show," he began, setting one edge of himself upon a chair very cautiously.

"I don't know," I answered diplomatically; "I'm pretty full."

"So am I," he hiccupped, "I don't often get down the river, but I'm sober enough for business, if you are. Can't you work me in on your list?"

"I dare say I can," I answered in an abstracted manner.

"What do you consider it worth?"

"That depends," said I with my customary caution, surveying his mammoth stomach. "Is keeping included?"

"Yes, and the best keeping that money will buy—I insist on half-barbecued meats, liquors and champagne."

JAMES DONALDSON, JR., MANAGER.

"They will cost like sin," I suggested. "Suppose you make a proposition."

"Well," said the old gentleman thoughtfully, "I'll tell you what I'll do: I'll furnish grub and drink for everybody, from the white mice to the giant from Palestine, including the Queen of the Flaming Zone and the elephant bull, and give you one thousand dollars, spot cash, for one day's performance."

"What!" exclaimed I, springing to my feet in great excitement.

"From the time you strike my place until you leave it," he went on, not noticing my astonishment, "everything, from a broiled woodcock to a roasted ox, will be provided, as free as a runaway nigger in Canada, and you can have your money before you elevate your tent."

My blood ran cold as I realized the assinine blunder I was making; Mr. Barker was not seeking an engagement, but wished me to give a performance on his plantation.

"You see how it is, Mr. Showman," he went on, having caught his second wind; "I've got eleven hundred niggers, big and little, and let me tell you right here that they're good niggers, and the best workers in Mississippi. Now, what do you think of this?" Here the old gentleman rose slowly from his chair and looked at me in a manner suggesting something awful impending. "Not a tarnation nigger of 'em ever saw a circus. They've no idea of an elephant or a monkey, and the Queen of the Flaming Zone," here Mr. Barker snatched his lips, "would set 'em crazy. I work 'em like Egyptian brick-makers, and have 'em licked tolerably regular, but I'm not so hard-hearted, so utterly depraved, as to allow 'em to go down to their graves without seeing a circus and menagerie."

One thousand dollars and found—and such findings were not to be sneezed at; so I inquired where his place was situated. My route from Natchez to Jackson lay within ten miles of it, and I hastened to accept his offer and to assure him that the morning of the second day of May would see me at his plantation.

"Let this be understood," said Mr. Barker, turning to leave—"the show is to go on all day and during the evening. I don't mean the entire show, but something to amuse and entertain the people. I shall invite all my friends of both colors, and a nigger for that day is to have a front seat, sit at the first table, and be as good as a white man."

About sunrise on the second day of May we reached the borders of Copiah County, where we found awaiting us as enthusiastic an escort as ever welcomed the conquering eagles back to Rome. It was composed of slaves from the Barker plantation. They were over seven hundred strong, and would have suggested a subject for an artist. Fully a hundred of them were mounted on mules, without saddles, while their commander and the general conductor of the entire party—a negro of enormous size—rode a handsome white horse. Ten large wagons, each drawn by four yoke of oxen, followed, filled with women and children, while over three hundred men and boys on foot brought up the rear. All were in their Sunday dress, the men wearing white-jackets, the women linsey-wolsey.

Thus escorted, we reached the plantation about nine o'clock and received a right royal welcome. The place was alive with people, white and black, and scores were constantly arriving, many coming a day's journey from adjoining counties. "Uncle Johnnie," as Mr. Barker was called by all who knew him, had sent out hundreds of invitations to his "circus and barbecue," and received very few "regrets," all well knowing that such an invitation meant a high old time.

On the immense lawn fronting the mansion was displayed such a collation as would have done credit to the bounty of a Prince and taxed the appetite of a Sancho Panza. Scores of cheeses, boiled hams, roasted fowls and pigs, great piles of bread, pies, cakes and roasted yams made the heavy plank tables fairly groan, while piled upon the grass were boxes of oranges and lemons, bunches of bananas, and crates of pineapples in great numbers. Several woolen blankets covered a large pile of ice, which was flanked by barrels of brandy and rum, and a great number of baskets of champagne and other wines. To the left of the lawn several beehives, sheep and hogs were being barbecued in large trenches.

Allighting from my carriage, I inquired for Mr. Barker, and was conducted to the veranda of the mansion, where Uncle Johnnie, clad only in a loose linen gown and a pair of slippers—the day was very warm—was seated in an oaken rocking-chair of Goliath-like proportions. His occupation was as curious as his dress. He was engaged in dispensing rum-punch, with a large, long-necked gourd, from a huge tub to throngs of thirsty negroes, who presented teacups, tinpans, coconuts and various other utensils for his reception.

Uncle Johnnie, transferring the gourd to a bright-eyed little dandy, with an admonition to spill none of the precious fluid and a hearty cuff, arose with some effort to his feet.

"I'm glad to see you," he said, giving me a hearty shake of the hand. "I feared you might miss your way, and sent a few of my niggers to bring you in. But sit down and taste something."

In two minutes more I had absorbed two glasses of strong brandy, and declined a third. Excusing himself, Uncle Johnnie waddled into the house, and, returning a moment later, handed me ten one-hundred-dollar banknotes.

As I turned my head, already half-turned by the generous brandy I had imbibed, and caught a glimpse of the lawn spread with a feast which would have brought water to the mouth of that ancient lady "who lived upon nothing but victuals and drink," and as the bouquet of the liquor mingled with the savory odors arising from the enormous roasts in the trenches, I blushed, showman though I was, as I received the money.

Breakfast was next in order, and it was an hour before we again appeared upon the veranda. In the meantime my men were not idle, and multitudes of negroes, speechless with astonishment, watched the vast white canvas as it rose like an enchanted palace.

At twelve o'clock eight thousand people, many of them white, were on the grounds. Uncle Jonathan Edwards, the most powerful colored preacher in Copiah County, invoked the Divine blessing, and, amid inspiring music from the band and cheers from thousands of dusky throats, the circus and dinner opened simultaneously.

And such a circus! Such a dinner! As was remarked by good old Dr. Russell, who came thirty miles on horseback to laugh, but spent the day ministering to sick stomachs and mending broken heads: "I did beat the gray-headed old Devil." Never before did showmen perform in presence of such an audience; and at no other time in my twenty years' experience in the ring did I see such riding, vaulting, tumbling, and balancing. Madame La Lazurine never before or since swept with such daring through the flaming zone, or caught with such grace the swinging trapeze; Grimaldi the clown was simply side-splitting in his antics and witticisms; Tince Midget seemed to shrink to less than a hand's breadth; while the giant towered at least two heads above his boasted eight-foot-two. Even the animals seemed to catch the enthusiasm. For the first time in their lives the monkeys in the dog-race used their whips with vigor, and were rewarded by screams of delight from the darkies, young and old. The camelopard elongated his graceful neck in conscious pride. The black bear for the first time essayed the highland-fling; while Julius Caesar, the mammoth elephant, that no ship could contain—unlike Jumbo, he was imported in his infancy—bearing upon his broadback full five-and-seventy half-naked colored urchins, who evidently revived within him pleasant memories of his far-away African home, marched majestically around the ring in excellent time to "See the conquering hero come."

For full two hours the circus, the menagerie and the side-show were the only attractions, and the sumptuous feast remained almost untasted. But when, at Uncle Johnnie's suggestion I announced that the show would continue during the entire afternoon and evening, a stampede occurred in the direction of the lawn, and thereafter audience and performers, like shuttles in a loom, vibrated from canvas to tables and tables to canvas.

By four o'clock victuals had become a drug, and drink alone was in active demand. The thirst produced by rum and brandy was quenched in the juice of the grape, and the sparkling wines of Burgundy and Champagne glided a most pleasing down the delighted throats of Senegambians whose highest idea of earthly bliss had hitherto been embodied in the "pinetop whiskey" of Mississippi.

When, since the ark, with its unparalleled, unpalatable attractions, was made fast at its first landing, and the "management" visited the wine-vaults in Noah's vineyard, did showmen drink in moderation? At four-thirty, the 64th shot of the herculean cannon-ball tosser became too drunk for use, and at five o'clock the clown alone was able to present himself in the ring, and he was in a condition to appear at his funniest without making the slightest exertion. In fifteen minutes he, too, succumbed, and the sawdust passed into the possession of the teamsters and canvasmen, who appeared in the role of amateur boxers and tumblers.

In the meantime my authority was set at naught, and my commands, expostulations and threats—showmen in the olden time never swore—were laughed at by those accustomed to obey. Like the philosophical Diogenes, Uncle Johnnie wrapped his single garment about him and retired to his tub, where he resumed control of the long-necked gourd. From his chair of state he looked benignly down upon the drunken, carousing multitude, and continued, with a smile, to add fuel to the flames by ladling out with no stinted hand his own favorite beverage—rum-punch. Under the influence of sweet wine, the monkeys chattered and frolicked as monkeys never did before outside their native forest. Julius Caesar, enlivened by five or six gallons of cognac, broke his chain, and, too drunk to charge the crowd, staggered about the lawn, regaling himself with cakes and nuts.

Beneath the unaccustomed excitement produced by heavy loads of strong drink, long-smouldering feuds between different plantations were revived, and fighting became the order of the day. "Hey, Rube!" rang upon the air, and the showmen joined in the melee. The scene that ensued beggars all description. My canvas was torn down and reduced to shreds, my wagons overturned and the animals released, and by nine o'clock barely a vestige of my magnificent circus and menagerie remained. Even Julius Caesar was no more. He had knocked over a little dandy, accidentally, no doubt, when hundreds of half-crazed negroes set upon him with clubs and rocks and actually beat and pelted him to death.

I was a ruined man. There was a mortgage on my show, and I owed my people a month's salary. With the aid of my ticket-agent I harnessed my horses to my traveling-carriage and escaped in the darkness. Three days later I sold them for a song in Vicksburg and took a boat for St. Louis, where I entered other business.

Never shall I forget the parting words of Uncle Johnnie, who saw me safely to the highway:

"Good-bye," he said, shaking my hand. "The show didn't go on as long as you contracted it should, but I don't blame you, and don't think my guests can blame me. The entertainment cost me $22,000, and you are out a right smart sum; but we can't complain, can we, since we've had the biggest blowout ever seen in Mississippi!"

DERIVATION OF TENNIS.—The derivation of the word "tennis" seems to have bothered the etymologists, most of whom tell us that it is "from the French tenes (take), a word which the French, who excel in this game, use when they hit the ball." If this statement was true, which it is not, it would not afford any satisfactory explanation of the word, and the other derivations usually given are even wider of the mark. Tennis, however, is the old English form of tenes, the plural of ten, and as we have another closely-related game called five, there can, it seems to me, be no doubt about the origin of the word. The game, I apprehend, went out of fashion about the time when the old plural tennis was giving way to the modern plural tens in popular speech, and when the game was revived, some time, say, in the fifteenth century, it still retained the old form, which in other cases had fallen out of use.—Notes and Queries.

"WHEN THE CURTAIN RISES."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Hark! the hour is striking: eight o'clock is here.
Now look at the people as they fast approach—
Happy expectation written on each face
As the curtain rises, each one in his place.

Now the ladies flutter fans of lovely hue,
And their bright eyes sparkle, be they black or blue,
Chaining all who view them, gay ones or sedate,
When the curtain rises as the clock strikes eight.

See! the merry urchins in the gallery high
Now are all attention—not pleasure high
And what famous actor 'mid his well-earned joy
But can he get the happier to have pleased a boy?

Some folks like the minstrels; some prefer the play;
Others like the opera or the circus gay;
But throughout the country, each recurring night,
When the curtain rises is a pleasant sight.

Ah! but this same curtain, when the clock strikes eight,
Could it tell each person of his future fate?
How some will gain riches, others yet gain health,
Or be Good Samaritans—better far than wealth.

With gloved hands the gentleman allied Therese to arise, and supported her almost without contact with her frame. It needed but little more to reassure her, and she soon resumed composure sufficient to give an account of the attempted abduction. "I am delighted at ridding you, madame, of these villains. I have taught them such a lesson that they will not return. Still, you are alone, and at this hour this quarter is deserted. I will escort you to your house, should you desire it."

"I accept your offer, sir, and thank you for coming to my assistance. God knows what the scoundrels would have done to me, and I tremble lest they have attacked someone waiting for me in this street."

"I saw no one," said the man with a half smile—"that is to say, I only saw your assailants, and they are beyond power of doing you harm. One has fled, but the other remains here, and I think, without more for some time."

"Ah! heavens! he's dead!" exclaimed Therese, as she perceived a man lying almost at her feet upon the pavement. She recoiled in horror as she imagined that it might be Andre.

The stranger bent over the fallen villain, shook him, and, upon finding that he did not stir, said: "I don't think him to be dead, but very near it."

"He must be attended to," said Therese with animation. "We cannot abandon him."

"How, madame, intend yourself in a scoundrel who would have wrought you injury? His comrades will care for him. And now it will be wise not to tarry in this unsafe place."

"You are right, sir. I dwell close by. In a few moments you will be free to continue your way, and I can send help to this unfortunate man."

The stranger offered his arm, and she leaned upon it. "My carriage is at your disposal," he said, pointing to a two-horse coupe which had stopped in the middle of the roadway.

"It is useless. We can walk."

"As you desire, madame. Only allow me to send my coachman a slight distance off, as it is unnecessary for him to see you."

The coachman was within sound of his voice. "Advance, upon a walk, to the Place d'Italie!" exclaimed the master.

And the well-trained domestic executed the order immediately. Therese was embarrassed to resume conversation, as a partial gleam of truth dawned on her.

"The letter by me received," she thought, "was a false one, written by mother's enemy, and instead of expressing gratitude to the courageous man risking his life in my preservation, I treat him coldly. What must he think of me?"

Then the young lady deemed it to be her duty to resume conversation the first.

"Sir," she said with feeling, "forgive me for omission of my duty. My mother will shortly return thanks to you in person, and in the meanwhile may I solicit the name of my preserver?"

"My name is of no consequence. I esteem myself favored in having extricated you from a dangerous situation. Should I seek to meet you again I would doubtless worry you, and I pray you, madame, to place absolute reliance upon my discretion."

"You style me madame. I am not married."

"Truly? Pardon me, I had imagined —"

"That an unmarried girl would not have ventured alone, and at night from home, and you ought to have a bad opinion of me. I will explain —"

"I criminalize you not, mademoiselle, and, furthermore, I have no right to adjudicate."

"But I have one to justify: yet not here, sir," rejoined Therese with earnestness. "Mother has perchance perceived my absence, and I cannot leave her in uneasiness. You will not refuse to enter the house with me?"

"Your pardon, mademoiselle; your mother is unacquainted with me, and I dread —"

"What? Inquisitiveness? After what has occurred, propriety and established usages go for nothing. I can in person present my preserver, and mother would not forgive me for returning without him." And, as the preserver appeared not entirely convinced of the propriety of the visit, she added: "Do you not understand that it is a favor I request?" and she bent upon him her tearful eyes.

They had reached a gaslight, and both could for the first time distinguish features. Therese perceived her deliverer to be a very fine gentleman.

"Mademoiselle," said the stranger, "I am wholly at your command. I will relate, should you so desire, to your mother all I have seen. But," he added with a smile, "I can relate that only, and I fear that she will not be content with my personal explanation."

"I hide nothing from my mother, sir," observed Therese with animation. "I did not forewarn her of my going out, and I will reveal the reason for so doing in your presence, as I do not desire you to entertain a bad opinion of me."

"As you please, mademoiselle. You can do but appreciate the situation."

"Come, then. We are already behindtime."

At some ten paces from the villa the stranger stopped upon perceiving a man opening the gate leading to it, and closing it hastily. Therese likewise stopped. The man advanced to the middle of the roadway, and looked about him, evidently in search of somebody.

"Wait here, mademoiselle, until I ascertain who is this individual."

"Unless," ejaculated the young lady after a moment's hesitation, "I know him." He comes out of the garden. He is a friend of my mother's."

"Excuse my error. I see assassins everywhere. Would it not be better, mademoiselle, to allow this gentleman to pass on before we enter? You may not like to be seen by him."

"No," returned Therese after reflection; "I prefer addressing him in the first place, as mother may be surprised at your presence, and I can explain to her friend."

"You know your business best, mademoiselle," murmured the stranger, seemingly reluctant to be questioned by the friend.

"Moreover, we have no time to avoid him," resumed the girl. "See! he is coming to us."

In fact, he had perceived them, and was approaching somewhat hurriedly.

"It is I!" exclaimed Mademoiselle Valdieu.

"You, Therese! What are you doing here?"

"You see, I am returning home."

"I knew not that you had gone out, and your mother believes you to be dead."

The two men confronted and examined each other attentively.

"If I am not mistaken," said the stranger, "I have the honor of speaking to the Commandant d'Arbois."

"How! that you?" responded Gontran in astonishment. "It struck me that I recognized you, but I could scarce credit my eyes, my dear Baron. In fact, I am bewildered."

"And I likewise," murmured the Baron, whom Gontran had not as yet named.

"Not more than I am, for I have spoken to you of my boulevard friends, and it is not surprising to meet me before their garden-gate. Moreover, Mademoiselle Valdieu could have informed you as to leaving me a half hour since in her mother's parlour."

"Mademoiselle Valdieu?" repeated the Baron. "Is this the lady I had the honor of —"

"Rescuing," but, as this necessitated a narration from the girl of her adventure, he modified his expression: "The honor of meeting."

"How! of meeting? Where? Upon the boulevard! Here is an explanation, my dear Randal, which to me explains nothing, and it seems that we are playing at cross-purposes."

Then he addressed Therese: "Mademoiselle, you alone can solve this conundrum."

"It is simple," answered the young lady readily. "This gentleman has saved my life."

"I understand it less and less. My dear Therese, how came your life to be in danger?"

"Tell him, sir," said the girl, addressing her defender, who this time could not refuse to throw light upon the situation.

Consequently, he related how, upon returning from a dinner-party, he had become an involuntary witness of Therese's attempted abduction.

"I must complete the explanation," quoth Therese. "While I was walking in the garden this evening a letter was handed me."

"Have a care," interrupted the Commandant. "If you have secrets, confide them to your mother."

"Mons d'Arbois is correct," observed Randal. "If you will allow me, I will pay my respects to this young lady's mother, and then take my leave for a revisit to-morrow—that is, provided I receive authorization."

"That is the idea," said Gontran enthusiastically, as he anticipated annoyance from premature revelations. "We will go into the house without loss of time, otherwise we will find the door closed. I left your mother, Therese, with your governess, preparing to retire, and Mademoiselle Gaudule will shortly descend into the garden to close the gate from within."

"Be it so!" rejoined Mademoiselle Valdieu. "I will precede you. Still, promise not to leave before seeing mamma."

"I have no inclination to do so. Therese and Mons. De Randal will assuredly not refuse to accompany me."

"I reckon upon it," said the girl, running to the door, which she opened.

"Parbleu! dear Baron, chance works wonders," exclaimed the Commandant. "I spoke to you of Madame De Lorrain, and here you have extricated her daughter out of a difficult situation. I desired to introduce you, and behold! you have introduced yourself, and in a manner to extort more than a welcome reception."

"I could deserve nothing better," returned the Baron, "and esteem myself fortunate in escaping a formal presentation. This adventure has served me well."

"You should be astonished," said Gontran, "at finding a young girl thus situated. I am not at present prepared to explain why she was out at an hour when those of her age remain beneath a mother's wing. Still, I shall learn all about it, and pledge my word to tell you the truth concerning this escapade."

"I think that I can guess it. You informed me as to her mother's having an enemy. Mademoiselle Valdieu spoke of receiving a letter."

"Written, undoubtedly," chimed in Gontran, "by that enemy. Upon what pretext was she allowed out of doors I cannot imagine. Letters have rained upon us all day; Therese received one, sending her to Madame De Lorrain's house in Paris, wherein she had never before set foot, and where she learned what her mother had been."

"She would have known it sooner or later."

"Assuredly, and the evil produced good. Jeanne immediately and definitely renounced the life she had been leading. She has come to inhabit this little house, wherein her daughter has dwelt since the hour of her birth, and out of which she never has gone unguarded."

"The situation is, then, clear, and the enemy has rendered Mademoiselle Valdieu a service."

"If such be your opinion, I do not regret having spoken of her to you. You will see her mother. I announced your visit for to-morrow, as authorized by you. She does not expect you to-night, and we will find her under excitement. I am none the less certain that she will welcome you. Only make the interview short."

"That is exactly my intention."

"We will not inform Therese of my intention to have introduced you. This is an important point. Everything would go badly should she suppose me to support your candidacy. I have not mentioned you to her. She neither knows who you are nor how I came to know you. This is an essential condition for success in our project, should you design its pursuit. Should she learn that we act in concert in opening relations with her mother, her mind is so active that she would at once imagine our having prepared in concert the act of her salvation from threatened violence."

"That would have been a difficult invention," said Randal with a smile.

"I mean to say that, had you not planned in advance this work of her rescue, you could not have succeeded. Let us strike while the iron's hot, and not allow the girl's enthusiasm to subside."

Randal nodded acquiescence.

"Come, let us enter without further delay," said Gontran, pushing open the garden-gate.

The doors, as well as the windows, were open, as on that evening everything was changed, for the inmates ordinarily retired to rest at ten o'clock. Consequently, Gontran and his companion could easily penetrate into the parlour, where their appearance created a sensation. Jeanne Valdieu, her daughter and Gaudule were standing in a group, all talking at once. The governess appeared most animated, and Gontran immediately comprehended that she was indulging in useless invectives against Therese's imprudence, while the girl made avowals without deigning to defend her conduct. Jeanne was pale and much excited.

"My dear friend," said the Commandant, "here is the Baron De Randal, who did not expect to see you to-day. I had all the trouble imaginable to drag him hither, as he desired to escape the expressions of gratitude due him."

"Excuse me, madame, for having succumbed to Mons. d'Arbois' persuasions," interposed the Baron with the ease of a man of the world. "I comprehended that you would desire to be alone with your daughter, and would not intrude, had I fear of impoliteness."

"I knew you would come," said Therese earnestly. "You promised me you would."

That young lady had resumed her composure and looked fixedly at Randal, an act which the Commandant interpreted as favorable to the Baron, announcing that Therese's heart would soon be captured, if it had not already been. Jeanne appeared less charmed, and Gontran imagined Randal to inspire her with more curiosity than sympathy. Yet he thought it to be a first impression, capable of fading away. He was not deceived. The gentleman immediately discovered the key-note.

"Madame," he resumed, addressing Jeanne, "I am profoundly touched by my reception, and I sincerely trust to be permitted to revisit you with my friend Mons. d'Arbois; but at this moment it would be indiscreet for me longer to trespass upon your time."

Jeanne sought to invent some polished sentence in response to this opening compliment, but it came not to her mind.

"I have, moreover," continued the Baron, "another motive for taking my leave. I have struck down one of the rascals attacking your daughter by a rude blow, and he remains upon the pavement. Even I fear I may have killed the man, when I must surrender to justice."

"To justice? That will be serious, and I think you are not bound to do so. No one saw the incident, what do you think?"

"No one saw his accomplice, who took to flight. My driver was there, but too far off to see the transaction with accuracy."

"Then I consider it to be wholly useless to bestow a thought upon the rascalship."

"However, should it become known —"

"I am certain that Madame Valdieu is of my opinion," said Gontran, glancing upon Jeanne, who replied by an affirmative nod.

"Think, my dear fellow," he resumed, "how you will be compelled to relate what attracted you to the scene, and you will be compelled to invent a lying story or to bring Mademoiselle Valdieu into notoriety."

"Rather than do that, I would stand an accusation for murder," said Randal feelingly. "And probably I had better abstain from researches."

"Certainly, if the wretch be dead," said Therese, who had listened attentively. "But, if he is only wounded, I do not want him to be abandoned in a helpless condition. Therefore, I pray you, go to go out and watch over him."

"I go, mademoiselle," said Randal simply.

No one attempted restraining him, not even Madame De Lorrain, who had not addressed a word to him during this brief interview. The Commandant reconducted the Baron as far as the porch merely, and said:

"All goes well, and will go better after I speak to the ladies. Should you pass near my house to-morrow morning, I hope to have good news."

"I shall not fail," answered the Baron warmly; "and as to that wretch, whether living or dead, I'll take care that we will never hear of him again."

"Yes; I believe we have nothing to fear from that quarter. I only regret not having an opportunity to question the scoundrel, to extort from him the name of our persecutor. I have even a mind to go back with you. Is it far?"

"Not very. Still, I advise you not to go thither. The police may arrive while we are examining the body, and perchance may demand our names. Nothing prevents my giving up mine, since, up to the present, I have not known Madame De Lorrain; but you are connected with her, and hence the case is different."

"You are right, dear fellow. I confide in you, and will enjoin the ladies to sustain you whenever you need it. You have pleased them, I assure you. Gaudule herself is fascinated."

"I am delighted at that. However, it seemed to me that Madame De Lorrain's reception was cold."

"Say Madame Valdieu, as Madame De Lorrain exists no longer. But you are deceived. Jeanne is only troubled, and for good cause. Moreover, I charge myself with removal of her prejudices, if, perchance, she has any against you, which I can scarce believe. To-morrow, then, at noon."

Randal departed, apparently in haste to terminate a conversation which, to tell the truth, little served his purposes. Gontran was in a hurry to question Therese, and he returned abruptly into the parlour.

"It is understood," he said; "Randal takes charge of everything, and we can rely upon him. The scoundrel he knocked down will not die in the street like a dog, and nobody will be compromised. Now I wish to know the precise contents of that letter."

"Here it is," said Jeanne. "Therese has given it to me."

Gontran read the note rapidly, and was impressed with the ingenuity of its composition. It was not in the Vicomte's handwriting, as the forger probably was unacquainted with Andre's autograph, and so was Therese. Still, it marvelously imitated the style of a despondent lover, and characteristically detailed the transactions in the Hotel du Hilder. Swearing, by all that was holy, that he had never before seen the creature sent to invade his domicile by his persecuting enemy, who had played an infamous trick upon them in the morning, it terminated by imploring pardon for an involuntary wrong, and soliciting, as a final favor, an interview, at which the Vicomte could effectually justify himself.

"Astounding!" exclaimed Gontran. "The scoundrel is well informed, and I am not surprised that Therese put faith in a note so ingeniously contrived. Who brought it?"

"A boy dressed as a hotel-chasseur," answered Jeanne.

"A rascal disguised for the occasion. Another plot, and we are all trapped by the scoundrel's device. We have great need of a supplementary defender, and Heaven be praised that chance has brought Randal to us."

He glanced at Jeanne and addressed Therese.

"What think you, dear child?" resumed the Commandant. "Does not the Baron merit our friendship?"

"I shall never forget my debt to him," responded the girl, "and I desire to forget the Vicomte d'Elven."

"I suppose the Baron's person is not displeasing?"

"No. Why that question?"

"Because—because he proposes to come again. Should he displease you, I will limit him to a visit of ceremony."

"I will always receive him with pleasure," said Therese, who did not appear inclined to express more clearly her sentiments as to Randal.

"You have need of rest," said her mother, convinced of the fatigues of prolonging the conversation. "Go to your room with Gaudule, and I will join you shortly."

"Well," said Gontran after their departure, "am I not right in telling you that this marriage will take place?"

"It has not taken place as yet," murmured Jeanne.

"As well as if it were done. I repeat, things will go of themselves. You shake your head. One would say that you were opposed to it. Why, I pray? Does not Mons. De Randal suit you?"

"I acknowledge that, should he marry Therese, it would be an unhoped-for alliance, although he is too aged for her; still, ought we not seek information, which we have not concerning a man with whom you are scarcely acquainted?"

"I will glean it, parbleu! Sartilly will furnish it. Have you no better reason to give?"

"I have another, not based upon common sense, I admit."

"Then it is useless to advance it; still, never mind. Out with it."

"Well, I experienced upon seeing Mons. De Randal a strange sensation. Whether his voice or his look troubled me I know not, but it struck me that that man would bring us misfortune."

"Good! You had the blues. All that is not serious, and after a little experience you will discover your daughter's preserver to be harmless. Dispel your visions, dearest Jeanne, and determine upon your programme. I'll take charge of Mons. De Randal, whom I will bring back to-morrow, while you can train Therese to become a Baroness."

CHAPTER IV.—THE CLOUDS BEGIN TO BREAK.

A week had elapsed since delivery of Therese by Randal from the miscreants offering her violence. During that blessed week not an untoward incident occurred. A profound calmness succeeded, as if by enchantment, the storms incessantly troubling the repose of the principal characters in our narrative. The optimistic anticipations of the Commandant were being realized. On the morning after the night attack he returned to the villa with his friend the Baron, who was better received than either of them had calculated upon. Gaudule overwhelmed them with courtesies. Therese, more reserved, gave the Baron a pleasing reception, while Madame Valdieu recognized Mons. De Randal as an accomplished gentleman doing her an honor through consenting to be her son-in-law. The accomplished gentleman was pleased with the marriage upon principle before he had known Mademoiselle Valdieu. Since her acquaintance he was in haste to consummate their union.

In addition to an assurance as to being above Parisian prejudices regarding caste, the Baron touched the question of interest through declaration of an intention not to accept a sous of dowry, but to marry on a theory of community—that is to say, to divide with his wife his personal estate, which he assessed at fifteen hundred thousand francs, to be controlled by Madame Valdieu's notary.

These generous propositions almost elicited from Jeanne a declaration of the fact of her daughter being heiress to over two millions, when she remembered the disastrous effect produced upon the Vicomte by mention of this magnificent inheritance.

Gontran, whom she consulted, approved of her prudence in withholding from the Baron knowledge of Therese's coming wedding, but it should be communicated after, at the time of preparing the marriage-contract. The cessation of hostilities created for Gontran ample leisure; still, he did not disarm himself, for he had attempted everything to reach the unattainable William Atkins, in whose existence he persisted to believe, although without proof positive. Hence on the night of the last episode in the war, Gontran, despite Randal's advice and suggestions, went forth to assure himself whether the stricken miscreant was still lying upon the pavement. At the scene of the conflict he discovered a small pool of blood; still, as wounds bleeding abundantly are by no means the most dangerous, it was not doubtful that the miscreant had picked himself up and decamped. To complete his researches the Commandant for eight days perused the city items in the newspapers, and could discover nothing in relation to a nocturnal brawl in the vicinity of the Boulevard d'Italie, much less a murder. It appeared to him that all the persons concerned in the episode were dead, and he was assuredly not deceived. He had suddenly become invisible, as if at word of command.

Some days after Randal's introduction to the Valdieu villa, where he established a permanent foothold, the Commandant visited the Vicomte d'Elven. He found him sad, but apparently resigned, and particularly taciturn. Gontran did not conceal from him that a suitor had presented himself to Therese with great chances of being accepted. The name was not mentioned, as he deemed it not advisable to excite Andre against the Baron. Neither were related particulars of the adventure precipitating matrimonial propositions. Andre coldly received this disagreeable information, and when questioned in a friendly way as to his projects replied that it had been his intention to abridge his stay in Paris, but that business would detain him for some time in the city.

Without apprising Mons. d'Arbois, the Vicomte had resumed in person the campaign undertaken by Gontran against Therese's inevitable persecutor and rashly conducted, inasmuch as the enemy redoubled his assaults without being discovered.

After much hesitation, Andre decided upon visiting his father's old friends, neglected for many years. One among them, being at the time vice-president of the club to which the Commandant belonged, offered his patronage to the Vicomte, which was by him accepted.

Andre consequently found himself in frequent social communion with Gontran and his companions. Hence, the Commandant failed not to believe that the discarded suitor sought consolation for his rejection by indulgence in gay society.

The Vicomte had purchased a saddle-horse, and, having the country habit of early rising, profited by devoting the fine mornings to rides in the Bois du Boulogne. Generally, he found no one to impede his exercise, but one day, as he was returning, chance led him to the Allee des Poteaux, down which was pouring in a contrary direction a stream of equestrians, riding either alone or in small groups. Andre's thoughts were concentrated upon the lovely girl he was never to see again, and, lost in sad reflections, he suffered the reins to hang loose over his horse's neck, as the animal walked in the middle of the road. One or twice he jolted against riders, cursing his stupidity when his horse carried him into the middle of a group of equestrians riding towards him.

"Sacre bleu, sir! pay attention," shouted an irritated voice. The shock of contact was so rude that Andre, in his abstraction, should have been unhorsed, but, instantly aroused, he resumed a firm saddle and found himself face to face with the Commandant d'Arbois, who formed the centre of a group of four cavaliers.

"How! you, my dear fellow!" exclaimed Gontran, changing his tone. "How the Devil did I expect to meet you, and in this fashion? Fortunately, you are a capital rider, and I also, otherwise we would have afforded the lady riders of the Allee des Poteaux the ridiculous sight of a double fall."

"Pardon me," muttered the Vicomte, "I was in momentary meditation."

"Good!" quoth Gontran; "but this is no place for dreaming. Gentlemen, here is the Vicomte d'Elven. My dear Andre, here you have Desterday and Sartilly."

The Commandant in this familiar manner designated his neighbor to the right and to the left, who exchanged with Andre courteous salutations.

"And," continued Gontran, "where are you, Randal?"

"The Baron, who had dropped to the rear, advanced, saying in a low tone, to let the gentleman pass."

He saluted, like the rest, politely, and even with some show of enthusiasm, but Andre returned his salutation with an icy coldness.

"Then you are acquainted?" said Gontran.

"Yes," replied the Baron; "the gentleman did me the honor of a visit the other day, and I am delighted at meeting him again."

"My dear Andre," resumed the Commandant cheerfully, "you will join our party."

The group reformed. Andre rode with Gontran to the right and Desterday to the left, while Sartilly and Randal formed the left wing.

"You know, my dear Commandant," said Desterday, "that the Vicomte joins the club?"

"Ah! Truly?" exclaimed Gontran.

"Heavens! yes," responded Andre, slightly embarrassed; "I fear being detained here by business."

At this time the water had become so rough that it was impossible to continue the race, and the flag was lowered. At four o'clock the water had calmed down considerably, and the judges decided to call the race. The first heat in the four-oared race, Mutual, Celtic, Queen City and Boston, was made, with the Mutual in the rear. At three last-named on even terms, the Mutual in the rear. HARLEM REGATTA ASSOCIATION.
The eleventh annual Fall regatta of this association was held on the Harlem River on Saturday, Sept. 29. The weather was extremely favorable for outdoor sports, being raw and threatening rain, while the strong counter attractions of the Jay-Eye-St. Julien trot and the opening day at Jerome Park continued to render the attendance very light. Fortunately the threatened rain held off and the oarsmen were well satisfied with the condition of the water, which would hardly admit of improvement. The trial heats were rowed in the morning, upstream with the tide, and the final heats and dash races down stream in the afternoon, also with the tide except in the earlier part of the afternoon, when the tide was against the oarsmen. The course was the usual one-mile straightaway, between the Columbia College boathouse and Macomb's Dam bridge, just below which was anchored the barge chartered for the occasion and freighted largely with the lady friends of the members of the association. We present below the results of the day's work:

Senior single sculls—First heat: Charles Wolford, Union Boat Club, first in 6m. 49s.; W. C. Kemp, New York Rowing Club, second; M. T. Hard, New York Athletic Club, third. Second heat: B. F. Barnes, Atlanta Boat Club, first in 7m. 3s.; H. S. Rokenbough, New York Rowing Club, second. Third heat: N. Davis, Nonpareil Rowing Club, first in 7m. 3s.; A. F. Underhill, New York Athletic Club, second; W. Mulcare, Nonpareil Rowing Club, third. Final heat: Wolford first in 6m. 37s.; Davis second, in 7m. 39s.; Barnes did not finish. The winner led all the way, and the race was without interest.

Senior single sculls—Second heat: R. O. Morse, Kansas Boat Club, first in 6m. 46s.; James Pilkington, Metropolitan Rowing Club, second; J. M. O'Connell, Metropolitan R. C. third. Second heat: Ed. J. Blake, New York Athletic Club, rowed over alone. Final heat: Morse first in 7m. 50s.; Pilkington second, in 7m. 50s. The race was well contested, the men leading alternately, but Morse having most speed to finish with.

Four-oared gulls—Union Boat Club, W. Roby (bow), O. S. Stephens, W. Schuler, S. Van Zandt (stroke), J. T. Hardin (coxswain), first in 7m. 7s.; Metropolitan Boat Club, W. E. Griffin (bow), R. H. Schille, B. A. Jackson, W. F. Banham (stroke), J. T. McIntyre (coxswain), second, in 7m. 10s. The "Met" were first to show in the lead, being at one time almost half a length ahead, but the strong oarsmen overhauled and passed them, staying in front till the finish.

Senior four-oared shells—Atlanta Boat Club, William H. Downs (bow), E. P. Seely, E. Barnes, John E. Eustis (stroke), (bow), G. F. 39s.; Nonpareil Rowing Club, G. W. Johnson (bow), L. Mass, W. Mulcare, Frank Sabulka (stroke), second, in 6m. 40s. The Atlanta four assumed the lead at the start, and the Nonpareils were never able to get on even terms with them, being finally beaten quite easily.

Double sculls—Metropolitan Boat Club, W. R. Kent, James Pilkington (stroke), first in 6m. 54s.; Atlanta Boat Club, R. H. Bryan, D. A. Gaylord (stroke), second, in 6m. 56s. The contest was not nearly so close as the time would indicate, the Metropolitans quickly wresting the lead from the Atlanta and winning with ease, after waiting for their opponents to come up at the finish.

Junior four-oared shells—Athletic Boat Club, Fred Fortmeyer (bow), J. H. Hyde, N. Jenkins, J. Hayes (stroke), first in 6m. 54s.; Metropolitan Boat Club, T. S. Mahoney (bow), O. G. Bates, H. W. Brangene, E. B. Schille (stroke), second, in 6m. 58s.; Nonpareil Rowing Club, A. Braun (bow), W. G. Ball, H. J. Dwyer, H. Cordan (stroke), third. The Metropolitans were the leaders until they got into the swell of a tug near the finish, which settled them.

Eight-oared shells—Union Boat Club, S. Van Zandt (bow), W. Schuler, O. T. Stephens, L. Walter, O. Berger, Max B. Keesche, W. R. La or Aug. Schneider (stroke), J. T. Hardin (coxswain), first in 6m. 25s.; Metropolitan Boat Club, W. E. Coffey, R. H. Schille, B. A. Jackson, W. F. Banham, P. E. Nagle, N. Williams (coxswain), second, in 6m. 26s.; Atlanta Boat Club, D. A. Gaylord (bow), G. F. 39s.; Nonpareil Rowing Club, G. W. Johnson (bow), L. Mass, W. Mulcare, Frank Sabulka (stroke), second, in 6m. 40s. The Atlanta four assumed the lead at the start, and the Nonpareils were never able to get on even terms with them, being finally beaten quite easily.

COURTNEY vs. ROSS.
The deposit of two hundred and fifty dollars alluded to in our last issue as having been forwarded by James Keenan of Boston, on behalf of Charles E. Courtney, for a match with Wallace Ross, according to the terms of the latter's challenge reached us on Wednesday, Sept. 26, and since then we have received from Courtney articles of agreement, to which the attention of Ross is called.

SCULLERY NAVY.—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Scullery Navy, will be celebrated on Friday, Oct. 5. A review of the barges of the clubs will be held immediately thereafter. The boats will form for the muster along the breast of Fairmount Dam, with the steamboat-wharf on the right. The champion of the present year will be the leader in the respective races. A bronze medal designed and struck at the U. S. Mint in commemoration of the event, will be presented to each member of a club in uniform in the procession.

JEROME PARK RACES.

The Fall meeting of the American Jockey Club commenced on Saturday, Sept. 29, but, owing to the match-trot between Jay-Eye-St. and St. Julien being fixed for the same day, the attendance of spectators was very much smaller than usual at the races of this organization. The weather was unfavorable, although the threatened rain did not fall, and the track was heavy from the down-pour of the night preceding. Results: Purse $250, for three-year-olds and upwards, entrance $25 each to second, one mile—P. Lorillard's Aranza (100, Schauer, the favorite) first, in 1:47; Duplex (110, W. Donahue) second, by two lengths; Brad (106, Cross) third, by a length. Selling race, $500, for three-year-olds and upwards, entrance $25 each to second, one mile—P. Lorillard's Aranza (100, Schauer, the favorite) first, in 1:47; Duplex (110, W. Donahue) second, by two lengths; Brad (106, Cross) third, by a length. Selling race, $500, for three-year-olds and upwards, entrance $25 each to second, one mile—P. Lorillard's Aranza (100, Schauer, the favorite) first, in 1:47; Duplex (110, W. Donahue) second, by two lengths; Brad (106, Cross) third, by a length.

LOUISVILLE JOCKEY CLUB.

Sept. 29, weather clear and warm, attendance very large, and track good, but dusty as it had been ever since the opening day: Selling race, $300, a mile and a half—Gus Mathews (100, Murphy, the favorite) first, in 1:32 1/2; McGowan (105, Swiney) second, by four lengths; Manito (113, Stovall) third, by half a length. The Louisville Champion Stallion Stakes, for three-year-olds, $250 each, $100 to second, a mile and a half—Dryer Bros.' Miss Woodford (107, J. McLaughlin, the favorite) first, in 2:37; Slocum (107, 84s) second, by a furlong, easily; Wandering (107, Murphy) third, by a short head. The race was a perfect walk-over for Miss Woodford. The Belle Meade Stakes, for two-year-old colts, six furlongs—Bob Miles (105, J. McLaughlin, the favorite) first, in 1:55; Richard Lord (102, Gorham) second, by a length; Loflin (105, Murphy) third, by the same distance. Purse $250, weight for age, six furlongs—Force (121, Murphy, the favorite) first, in 1:55; Dudley Oaks (118, Baker) second, by a head; Lillie (114, Lillie) third. Purse $250, for three-year-olds, six furlongs—Burt Gould (105, Williams, the favorite) first, in 1:54; Transmitta (105, Taylor) second, by ten lengths. Rain caused a postponement of the races fixed for Oct. 1.

JAY-EYE-SEE vs. ST. JULIEN.

An immense crowd of people gathered at the Gentlemen's Driving Park, Morrisania, N. Y., on Saturday afternoon, Sept. 29, to witness the trot for a purse of five thousand dollars by J. I. Case's little black gelding Jay-Eye-See and Orrin Hickock's big bay St. Julien. It was a special match, best three heats in five, and St. Julien was the favorite at odds of about one hundred dollars to eighty; but Jay-Eye-See won in three straight heats, trotted in 2:20 1/2, 2:18 1/2, 2:19. In the first heat he carried St. Julien to a break near the finish, the latter running over the line in advance; the second was won by a length and a half, and the third by three lengths. The track had been rendered heavy by the rain, which fell the night previously, and the anticipated fast time was not made. John Murphy also drove Steve Maxwell and running-mate a mile in 2:24 1/2, repeating in 2:16 1/2, and toiled Majolica over the coufee in 2:19.

RACING IN ENGLAND.

The first Newmarket "October" Meeting commenced Sept. 25, on which date the Great Final Stakes, for three-year-olds, $250 forfeit, $3,750 added, $1,500 to second, $100 to third, and $500 to the breeder of the winner, a mile and 5/8 yards, was won by the Duke of Hamilton's Osian (1518), with Goldfield second and Prince third. Goldfield was the favorite. On the following day, the Weather Handicap was won by W. M. Redfern's Vanderhulst; Condor second and Keene's Bolero third. Same day, the Great Eastern Railway Handicap was won by Amy Melville first, Narcissa second and Eversleigh third. On Sept. 27, the Newmarket Handicap, for three-year-olds, $125 each, $750 added, one mile 3/4 yards, was won by L. De Rothschild's Hamako, with Ladislas second and Keene's Bolero third. Same day, the Newmarket October Handicap, all ages, $75 each, $1,000 added, same course, was won by Lord Zetland's McMahon, by ten lengths; Vista second and Scobell third.

THE VICTORY OF BARNEY ARON at Rye Beach, Wis., on Sept. 25, entailed a heavy loss on Appleby & Johnson, who had backed their horse for over twenty-five thousand dollars. He lost by a head only. Mutual pool tickets on the winner paid more than $102 for each $5 invested.

BILLIARDS.

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

This organization held its fifth annual meeting on Oct. 1, and in this city. As was to have been expected, there was a large delegation of Philadelphia members present. The master-roll for this city was also well represented. The usual promises of aid from here were made, and they will probably not be carried out. The projected exhibition in Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia, last Spring, was postponed in order to make sure of the services of Vignaux; and the service of Vignaux are what it must now get along without. Daly and Sexton at the meeting on Oct. 1 were made a committee to make arrangements for the postponed exhibition at Horticultural Hall. It cannot be given except at the cost of great sacrifices on the part of the Philadelphia members. The players will be lacking. Daly and Schaefer sail on Oct. 10 on Daly's experimental trip to Europe, and are liable, if the trip is successful, not to be back for many months. It is not a million dollars to a copper that Sexton also does not go over, as in Leavenworth, Kansas, the other day, he said he was going. He is "under forfeit"—and an honest forfeit—of $250 to go to Chicago, at all events, and remain there until Oct. 24; and so is Slosson, who is liable to remain there for a much longer period, if not to settle at the West altogether. When it is impracticable to give even one exhibition two are to be given. John D. O'Connor has offered the gratuitous use of his Madison Hall for one in this city, and the strong hope is held out that the rivalry between New York and Philadelphia to liberally patronize these affairs will redound greatly to the credit of the association financially. The New York division must be giving the Philadelphia members "taffy," for they cannot but know that there will be no players to take part in the proposed exhibitions unless they are held before Oct. 10. The claims of the association are otherwise in a quite encouraging condition. The money either on hand or invested for the contingent benefit of sick or crippled members amounts to $1,200, the secretary informs us. At the meeting on Oct. 1 all the officers of last year were re-elected. H. W. Collender presided. What this association needs is a greater number of members from among that class who can be directly benefited by it. Then it will be influential enough to both protect and carry through plans for its perpetuation without having to rely upon the half dozen experts, from Slosson to Vignaux and Dion, who are directly or indirectly under the control of manufacturers, and the services of the bulk of whom are desired in schemes that are expected to draw more money from European assemblages than can be hoped for in connection with exhibitions in this city and Philadelphia in aid of the National Billiard Association, however worthy its aims and urgent its needs.

CHICAGO'S CONCLUSION.

The Herald of that city, in its issue of Sept. 30, says: "Having got a safe distance from here, Schaefer has been indulging in a big talk, and is trying to make people believe that Slosson is afraid of him and that his proposed match was a bluff. This is not the fact, and Slosson's challenge to Schaefer in this city is the result of some unguarded talk on the part of Schaefer. In the presence of a reporter of a daily and the editor of The Spalding Baseball and Brunswick & Balke Billiardable Weekly, Schaefer said if a match for $5,000 could be made between him and Slosson he would accept it. The friends of Slosson no sooner heard this than they at once jumped at the offer, and deposited $1,000 in the hands of Yank Adams. The money is still in the hands of the paper which Mr. Adams represents, and Schaefer knows it. The fact that it is still in Schaefer's hands is a fact of which Slosson or the Brunswick & Balke Company will not let him play.

The conclusion is correct, but there has been no "unguarded talk." This paper in its issue of Sept. 22 took the liberty to publish a private letter from Slosson, in the course of which he remarked that he thought the probable upshot of his challenge was that Schaefer would come to Chicago and offer to play him for great piles of money, but not for the championship, in which event he (Slosson) would not give him his table, but would make him toss. Farther West Schaefer had published that Richard Koche or his own employers would back him for $5,000. Schaefer got to Chicago on Sept. 20. The Clipper got there on Sept. 20 or 21, and on Sept. 22 Schaefer's proposition, which is given on an outside page, and which, it will be observed, makes no mention of any or other of the championship, was published. He had counted confidently on a counter-proposition from Slosson. But, as the latter had a perfect right to do when he had given no positive pledge, he changed his mind about the toss; and then there the earth opened and swallowed all who had any hand in this $5,000 offer. We give Schaefer a friendly tip. Richard Koche has no inclination, since the Sexton-Stedeker-Schaefer cushion-carom matches were concluded, and since he saw Slosson defeat Vignaux in Paris, to back Schaefer against Slosson; and while Schaefer's employers would cheerfully back both him and Slosson, they will not back either alone against the other. Anyone who is curious to know why can consult the files of The Spirit of the Times of November, 1868, or The Chicago Times of the same period, if our memory is of any account.

A TOURNAMENT IN BOSTON.—W. P. Marshall, who has done so much for the game at "The Hub," is discussing the practicability of instituting a tournament at his Sudbury-street room this winter. Why not make it at the old round-the-table game, a form of which is still popular in Boston? That game is pockets and caroms, limited to three times off the spot, on a six-pocket table. It seems with variety.

HEINER vs. SLOSSON.—At the room of the latter, on Sept. 29, he and Randolph Heiser played a practice-game of 300 points, cushion-caroms, in which the younger player made double figure runs of 12, 13, 16, 19 and 21. Slosson made no run of any account, but he played with characteristic steadiness all over the table, and must have averaged at least 4 1/2, as he scored his 300 when his antagonist had but 202.

W. H. POMEROY has, for its size, the handsomest room in town. It has six tables, four of which were for a year or so in his room in Fourteenth street; the other two are new. Schaefer and Sexton exhibited there on the night of Sept. 28. The indications are that Pomerozy will make it "go," although several others have failed there during the past twenty years.

THE CHICAGO POOL TOURNAMENT.—Thirty-six entries have already been made for the fifteen-ball series to begin on or about Oct. 10 at the Collender Hall. The management propose to select a dozen, as thirty-six are numerous by three times too many.

It is as good as a cinch to hear Slosson "kick" against cushion-caroms while practicing it in the daytime. At night he tries to keep mum, because of the people around the table, but the air is blue from his hot breath.

RUDOLPH has not been heard from in several weeks. Some of his friends fear that he was swallowed up by the recent earthquake in Java. We do not share in that fear. There has never been much money in billiards in Java.

A NEW ROOM with six U. S. Standard Co. tables was to have been opened in this city Oct. 1. It is "The Kendall," with a change of quarters. Geo. Ellis is in charge.

LESLIE SLOSSON, as to the accident to whom there is reference in the billiard department on an outside page, had not been able to leave his room up to Sept. 29.

JOHN CUKHAN of Philadelphia came to town on Oct. 1, and called at THE CLIPPER office, as is his wont.

JAMES FALMER and wife were in this city from Philadelphia Oct. 1.

DAVID BEIR is still in Chicago.

STRAY SHOTS.

*Leslie E. Slosson was one of those injured on Sept. 10 in the collision, near the railroad depot at Long Island City, between an incoming train and a passenger car. He was badly shaken apart, and has not yet been able to pull himself together. His injuries were such, he claims, as to seriously impair his eyesight, stoma-ach and lungs. He last week entered suit against the Long Island Railroad Co., claiming damages to the extent of fifty thousand dollars. It would have cost the railroad company but five thousand dollars to have killed him outright. Perhaps they would have been wiser had they done so. Slosson seems to be a much stronger case than Parker had. His lawyer is Peter Mitchell, an old billiardist, he having kept a room on Broadway, this city, sixteen or seventeen years ago.

*George Sutton and William Wallace, who had been pooling in Philadelphia, Lancaster, Reading, Pittsburg and other places, arrived here on Sept. 29. A programme of one of their entertainments, in which they were announced to be assisted by Edward McLaughlin, of Philadelphia, states that in one bout at pool, best two in three, Wallace was to play blind. That is very funny.

*On the night of Sept. 27, before starting for the West, Joseph Casper, ex-champion of Ohio, tested the mettle of George Slosson at cushion-caroms, receiving the odds of a discount and twenty-five per cent. Slosson won by 11, scoring 162 to Casper's 65, exclusive of 35 points as odds. The best runs were 27 and 33 by winner and loser respectively, and the averages within one point of two for the loser and a point over five for the winner. Slosson then doubled-discounted an amateur who plays about even with Casper, and won by 26, scoring 248 to 74, the loser's average being exactly 2 and his best run 14, and the winner's average 6.26-37 and best run 32. Not having practiced since the tournament began in this city in May last, Slosson is "dead stiff" as a player, and he has been obliged to get into the peculiar cushion-carom straddle. He "gets on" quickly, however; and, after the "settles," his high run, which as far as not been above 32, will reach at least 33 or 34. It may be worthy of note that his best run on record at this style of play is 32, made in the New York tournament of 1881. In that tournament he made the best grand-average, which was 3.77-469 in 1,654 points, made up of nine games; and, if he is very lucky, he will do at least as well as that in the Chicago match. Sexton in the same tournament made a grand-average of 2.488-512 in 1,610 points. This is the only tournament in which Sexton has played the game on a 6x10 table, and Slosson has at no other time played that game in public. On a 4x9, and under a rule not observed in 1881 facilitating counting, Sexton in the tournament last Spring made a grand-average of 5.187-507 in 2,722 points, made up of six games. His best average in a match is 4.848-165 points, 6x10 table. Daly alone has done better, but not much better.

*J. F. Donovan, manager of the Monarch Hall, St. Louis, has projected a series of games there among the leading players of that city. The interest manifested by the public in these contests is of itself the highest compliment that Mr. D. can desire in recognition of his well-known enterprise.

*Detroit, Mich., has in John Armstrong the counterpart of the late M. M. Miller, who for years ran something like fifty-five tables in New York and St. Louis. Mr. A. controls fifty-one in the Arcade, Mansfield Market and Jefferson-avenue rooms, Detroit.

*At the Billiard Exchange, San Francisco, Sept. 14, J. F. B. McCleery of that city and Harry Cole, who seems to have settled there, played a match announced as for $250 a side. It was at the straight three-ball game, and Cole was beaten by 500 to 395. The winner's best run was 95, and the loser's 89. The Pacific Life states that McCleery used the game on the fifty-seven-inch table, and averaged a little over seven points to the run. This leaves the average in doubt. Fifty-seven innings would make it 8.44-57, or within 13 points of 9.

*Joseph P. Henry is engaged at the Arcade room, Detroit, Mich. He is a nephew of the late Michael Phelan, and a brother, we presume, of the young John Henry who about twenty-two years ago gave promise of becoming a strong player, which promise was never fulfilled, as we think he died not long after.

*Joseph Casper, having finished his season at Coney Island, was to have started for the West on Sept. 28, there to locate once more.

*The tournament at the Collender Billiard Hall, Chicago, resulted in a tie between Messrs. Sall and Griffith, the former having been defeated in the final game by the latter. We suppose that by this time the tie has been played off, but we have not heard the result.

*In Philadelphia on Sept. 26 Edward McLaughlin made a run of 352 at the straight three-ball game. It was a private game, played in McLaughlin's own room, and hence "does not count," but it was a creditable performance for McLaughlin, nevertheless. It was made on the rail, the balls making the tour of the table twice. The number of points was 600. McLaughlin averaged 60. His opponent, George B. Sutton of this city, did not make 160 points altogether.

THE RING.

JIM GOODE.

This English middleweight boxer arrived at Boston, Mass., on Tuesday, Sept. 25, on board the steamer Iowa of the Warren line, and is stopping with his friend, Fanny Sheppard at 71 Harrison avenue. A record shows him to be one of the best of the latter-day middleweight pugilists. Born in London thirty-three years ago, he stands 5 feet 8 1/2 inches in height, and in condition weighs about one hundred and forty-eight pounds. He first came into notice by his fight with Benny Harrington at Dagobah, England, in 18

WAGNER. It is our rule not to give the area of professional especially ladies. It is not so with men in many cases. We do not age so fast as women. I have known many men who were 40 years of age and the lady in question is quite as old as forty, but we would feel justified in deciding a bet on that belief. If it is so, I would like to see you, we will add that when I was asked that she was born in 1847, I thought the news item was a mistake. I am sure she cannot well be more than a year or two at most from the same time.

NO HIGHERS. St. Louis.—I. We cannot tell you how many it would take. It would depend upon the nature of the entertainment, upon the route proposed to be taken, upon the number of persons to be taken, upon the number of automobiles, and the extent of the printing, and upon many other things. We have not a regular company, but we have a company which goes to some places than a specialty company, and vice versa. It would be better to hire a first-class manager, and better to give him an interest in lieu of all salary, if he could be persuaded.

A hundred or more have so appeared in that spectacle, and probably at other times, in minor towns, the number has dwindled to fifteen or twenty, possi-

READER.—We never make known the salary any individual performer receives or any manager pays. It is a matter that is too often exaggerated. There are three kinds of salaries—one that an artist actually gets, one that the public is told he gets, and one that other artists in the same line or company are told that he gets. In other words, many artists of eminence get what are professionally known as "drawback salaries," or salaries with a string tied to them.

INTRODUCTORY.

TUESDAY, Oct.

Cambridge as well as other parts of the rim of "The Hyclept Boston, are astir over the bold stand taken by sun that "The Musketeers" is to be performed as a part of a cycle of entertainments now giving in Union Hall. One reviewer called upon the managers of the course and sought to urge upon them to forego their evil intention of bringing out a musical opera. Success issues not rewarding his efforts, he came to touch the hearts of his congregation by advising them to be the pulpit "not to patronize an entertainment tinctured with the least odor of the theatre." One of the deacons of another church is ticket-seller for the course, and his pastor told him that he and the ticket-seller could not remain in the same church. Nevertheless, Mr. Fuller is trying to find out how to remain in the same church at the same time that he is in the hands of the beholder of his disfellowshipped. And

Cambridge divine threatened never to receive a parishioner who went to the pit. But he remained for Rev. George Burdett of the Fulham Church to put on a saving touch, which he did in a sermon wherein he declared that those who went to see the opera would be "cast into all-consuming pit in which all who do not believe will be burned to a crisp, there not being sufficient left as food for worms." This is horrible, if true. There is, however, no doubt as to whether or not the overzealous cleric is right or down right; as there is no doubt that some doubt themselves as to whether or not he is the party who is entitled to give the final decision. Once upon a time, right of appeal was not denied to a luckless fellow found himself stretched on a cross. The Cambridge

The burning of the burning of the Ring of Vienna, would not have been half so appalling had not the exit-doors been found locked. Stringent laws were to keep such doors open thereafter. At the Carlsbad Theatre in the same city, there was a panic recently, and it was discovered that the doors of all the emergency exits were locked, which is a fact of enormous consequence greater than that of the universe, and that absolute certainty in any case is no more possible than positive certainty in all cases. . . . Some of the English newspapers are "giving" to their readers by telling them that Henry Irving will o-large here. His sitting-room will front on Fifth avenue. The big mirror has been expressly made in order that he may study, strut and pose before it; and, besides a special dressing room for pose, he will have a room for repose, and another for toothbrush and comb. The English people have no idea of half the comforts that have been planned for the construction of The Vanderbilt. Lovers will be able to plan for the construction of a vast railway from their mansion down to the Star Line and Irving will have a palace-car all to himself. Mr. Terry. In the daytime he need not go to the theatre, for special negotiations having been entered into to allow him the Cathedral on Fifth avenue for rehearsals. Dion Boucicault, according to one of our English friends, is his dramatic company. He is having a palace car built "for himself alone" as the "star," but also for the ladies and gentlemen who are to cluster around him in it. There are to be whole companies of eighteen people; a kitchen, with two large chefs de cuisine; a dining room, with twelve tables for party. Mr. Boucicault's intention is to charge each member of his troupe $25 a week for board and lodging, table included, champagne, cigars and washing extra. Of course he will pay salaries sufficiently liberal to justify the expense, and utility-man in expediting the work for board and lodging. He has clipped up the whole business into cash-meats and by importing his wines and buying fish-meats and groceries wholesale, he can clear each week and leave him a considerable profit. The great dramatist will thus be independent, not only of the hotels, but also of the local theatres, for in case of a slump he should be paid at the theatre he can increase his profits by cutting a few dishes out of the bill-of-fare serving ordinary table-d'claret.... Mexico appears to be a city on this continent, except New York, where the winter is not so cold. At the time it is Spanish, but in winter there are one or two long seasons of Italian or the first-class, and also of French opera, the latter by the same companies that entertain New Orleans. The lighter opera of the lighter type is a musical drama in the true sense, being generally serious, with a tendency to the spectacular.

and the ballet plays a conspicuous part. The music, lyrical, melodramatic, chrestal and vocal, has often a tendency to extreme exaggeration. A peculiar feature of the Spanish musical drama is the artificial and conventional method of acting, which is in part derived from Italian precedents. They set the stage magnificence of the spectacular pieces, while the ballet is exquisitely good. . . . In the death of Mrs. Marie Wilke, the American stage suffers the loss of another valuable artist, one who probably had no superior in setting sharply and effectively before the audience the eccentricities or peculiarities of delineation.

which success in her special line so largely depends. She achieved dramatic triumphs wherever she appeared, but her greatest came to her at the Union-square Theatre in "The Two Orphans." "Miss Milton," and "The Boy from the French Stage." She had so long been in ill-health that she would be missed the less; but she will be keenly missed, nevertheless. Panic among people who have pressing need to get out of a theatre are natural enough; but it is not often that we have to chronicle a panic among people who are striving to get in. There was such in Leeds, Eng., on Sept. 6. Between twelve and one o'clock in the daytime, a few hundred people assembled on the steps in front of the Town-hall to hear an instrumental concert. The band had got through one selection when it began to rain, and a move was made to the Victoria Hall. Anxious to hear the remainder of the concert, the people rushed towards the main entrance to the Town-hall. Only one narrow door was open, and as there were scores of people in front of it before the rush took place, the entrance was quickly blocked by a struggling mass of men and women. For a minute or two it seemed certain that a serious panic would follow. The crowd below continued to press forward, and one or two roughs seemed bent on creating mischief. The confusion was great, and it was only after exertion on the part of a few who "kept their heads" and did their best to get the people inside the hall that the danger was overcome. The case of Lytton Sothorn is a suggestive one. He is now starring in this case seems to be that Miss Anderson has been required to apply twice for permission to do a certain thing, when once was enough. "The Romanoff" was not played after Sept. 29. The management made this announcement: "Miss Charlotte Thompson accepts the verdict of the New York press with regard to her new play, 'The Romanoff,' and will withdraw it after Saturday's matinee." The verdict had scarcely been such as to necessitate withdrawal. There was a very general concurrence on the part of the press that "The Romanoff" was very like Sardou's "Fedora," as we stated last week. That alone is reason for its withdrawal, if Fanny Davenport had paid twelve thousand dollars for the American rights to "Fedora," as it is alleged that she has, and if Sardou, as is also said, has contracted to bear the expense of all legal measures to protect her in the enjoyment of what he claims to have the power to give. The plot and the treatment of "Fedora" may be simply a repetition of old plays, but it is the "Fedora" of London that has made a success of what previously were failures. Fulton did not invent the steamboat, but he made the "Clarendon" go, all the same. "The Romanoff" could not possibly "go" if "Fedora" were a failure, and its production now would not have been thought of. There is something weighty in this view in the days when absolute originality in literature of any kind is impossible.

CITY SUMMARY.

DALY'S THEATRE was opened for its fifth regular season Tuesday, Oct. 2, with a new comedy in three acts entitled "Dollars and Sense." As THE CLIPPER will have gone to press before the performance terminates, a review is necessarily deferred until our next issue.

MUSICAL NOTES.—Miss Nixau, the new leading artist of Gran's French-opera company, made her first appearance Oct. 25 at the Fifth-avenue Theatre in the title-role of Suppe's opera "Boccaccio." The newcomer is a very attractive performer, and has made a most favorable impression. She has a very pretty face, is of the brunette type, of medium stature, and has a graceful figure, and, besides, she is young and an intelligent actress. She lacks the snap and go made familiar to us by Almee, but her personation is made none the less pleasing, as her manner is graceful and expressive. Her voice is a fairly good mezzo-soprano of considerable compass, and she uses it in a tasteful way, with very little of the usual French tremolo to mar it. For an opera-buff singer she is exceptionally good. Almee did admirably as Beatrice, and the same remark applies to Nixau's performance as Desdemona. Almee and Guy and Lary's Orlando and Lello. The opera was repeated 27 and 29. Almee appeared in "La Mascotte" the rest of the week, and as Cyprien in Sardou's comedy "Divorcement" Oct. 1, with Miezere as Des Perennes. At the Sunday-night concert at the Casino Sept. 30 Titus D'Ernesti, an Austrian pianist, and Almee, Angele and Nixau were the soloists. Almee's performance was connected with both the rival opera companies. It appears that he has a contract with Mapleson, which he is willing to break and pay the fine that he may incur under Mr. Abbey's management. Almee, who is claimed by both impresarios, is probably in the same position. Almee, besides the above artists, announces his list as embracing Patti, Mme. Pappenheim, Mme. Patti, Mme. Vianelli, Mme. Dotti, Miss York, Mme. Valera, Gertrude, Signorette, Mlle. Faletti, Signorette, Vicini, Bettini, Perugini, Rinaldini, Nicolini, Vasselli, Signorette, Galassi, Cherubini, Caracciolo, Monti, Vasselli and Lombardi. The list embraces quite a number of newcomers. The Thalia Theatre opened Oct. 1 with the German version of "The Queen's Lace Handkerchief." Almee, Signorette, the orchestra-chief at the new opera-house, and Capoul arrived here Oct. 1.

"THE ROMANOFF" was withdrawn after the matinee Sept. 29 at the Twenty-third street Theatre, and "Jane Eyre" with Charlotte Thompson in the name-character, was produced that night.

A FAT WOMAN'S MARRIAGE.—Blanche Gray, said to be 16 years old and to weigh over 500 pounds, and David Moses, aged 20, were married on the stage of the New York Museum, 210 Bowery, Sept. 26, by the Rev. Charles E. Berger, an ex-chaplain of the army. The father of the bridegroom, who was opposed to the marriage, tried unsuccessfully to prevent it. The officiating "clergyman" was intoxicated, and the audience was boisterous and disorderly.

JAMES ALLISON, an Australian manager, arrived during the past week.

AUGUSTUS PITCO, business-manager of the Fifth-avenue Theatre, has returned from Europe.

WORK IS SLOWLY PROGRESSING on the new Bijou Theatre, and it will not be finished for a month at least.

THE ATTRACTIVE MINOR & SANGAR Fifth-avenue Theatre this week is the Howard Atherton Star Specialty and Comedy Company, which opened on Monday evening, Oct. 1, to a full house. The entertainment commenced with the German comedians Walton and Edwards in "Rudolph and Ricker Klins," in which these clever artists afforded much amusement; followed by Miss Clara Franklin in a selection of serio-comic songs, which pleased; Frank and the Weston Brothers in their musical act, in the course of which they play on a variety of instruments; Charles Postelle in female impersonations; the old favorites Miss May Ten Broeck and John E. Henshaw in their musical sketch "Deception;" Miss Maud Beverly, an excellent serio-comic vocalist from beyond the Atlantic; Jimmy Kelly and Jerry Murphy, first-rate glove-manipulators, in a boxing exhibition, which fairly set the audience "wild;" the Russian athletes—Fredericks, Gloss and Lavan—in their pedastal and balancing trick-ladder act; and "The Mads" in a very amusing act, the show concluding with the entertaining afterpiece entitled "Mrs. Partington" in which Charles Postelle impersonates the motherly old lady in a way that greatly amused the audience.

A HOUSE so well filled that standing-room was in demand greeted Tom Canary's American Four Consolidated Show at Harry Miner's Bowery Theatre on the night of Oct. 1, when they commenced a week's engagement there. The programme opened with A. H. Sheldon and other members of the company in the farcical sketch of "Twenty Minutes in Fishkill," and closed with Murray and Murphy's absurdity of "Our Irish Visitors." Sandwiched in between were the specialties of Pauline Batcheller, vocalist; Cardello and Van Auker, gymnasts; Murray and Murphy, Irish character-artists; the Parker Sisters, songs, dances, etc.; Shepherd and Hallam, instrumentalists; and a variety of other acts. The programme was a success, and the house was well filled.

THE EVER-ATTRACTIVE horseplay "Mazeppa," with Fanny Louise Buckingham and her steeled James Melville as the star features, is the principal lodestone at the National Theatre this week, where a fairly large audience assembled on Monday night to witness the very familiar unfolding of Casimere's woes and perils and an olio entertainment given by the following artists: Lucy Adams, vocalist; Foreman and Meredith in their sketch of "Diversification;" Emery and Russell in their musical medleys, cornet-solos, etc.; the Twilight Quartet—Hines, Hodges, Garrison and Martin—whose vocalists is of the camp-meeting and negro-hymn order; and the Star Four—Burke, Miles and W. F. and T. E. Cooper—comedians and dancers. The anniversary opening festival takes place here to-morrow (Wednesday) afternoon and evening.

AT COLVILLE'S FOURTEENTH-STREET THEATRE Oct. 1 Miss Fanny Davenport began a season that promises to be financially successful, as the attendance at this house, although not so large as formerly, now represents money. It is already artistically successful. The play introducing Miss Davenport to this stage is Sardou's "Fedora," seen on Monday night last for the first time in America. Our foreign-drama department reviewed it at length on the occasion of its original production in French by Sarah Bernhardt, and therefore it is not necessary at this time to make any reference to a story that should be fresh in the minds of our readers. The cast is given to show the strength of the company supporting the star:

Loris.....	R. B. Mantell	Dr. Muller.....	James Miller
De Sirex.....	Eugene McDowell	Zune.....	O. M. Dunn
Boroff.....	S. C. Dubois	Nona Ditcher.....	H. Williams
M. Rouvry.....	Spencer	Docteur.....	Mr. Gernon
M. Verneet.....	A. D. Campa	Radie.....	Miss Fanny Davenport
Dr. Loreck.....	Louis R. Grisel	Fedora.....	Miss Fanny Davenport
Griech.....	Eugene O. Jepson	Countess Olga.....	Miss Ada Monk
Sasine.....	Shelton Kinney	Madame De Tournai.....	Madame De Tournai
Titchell.....	T. J. Herndon	Miss Marie Sheldon	Baroness Oskar
Dimitri.....	Miss Lucy Pixley	Baroness Oskar.....	Miss Helen Bertram
Desire.....	Edward Warren	Marka.....	Miss Annie White
Ivan.....	L. S. Anderson

The play is carefully and tastefully mounted. It is generally well acted. Fedora is a most exigent role, and sorely taxes the physical powers of Miss Davenport, who, besides, in having to render remarkably, whether because of illness or desire to render herself better adapted to the part, a character not simply associated in the public mind with the skeleton Bernhard, but also requiring an uncommon amount of action, nervous force, bursts of energy, and quick transition from simulated love to intense hatred—all inconsistent with an excess of carbon in the human system—has manifestly become physically weak, and less strong and clear in voice, as if a cough were lurking behind. Very few of the lady's many admirers dared venture the hope that in an severe part she would acquit herself at all as well as she did. She has never done anything better, and has done but few things so well, which is saying a great deal of this crowning success in a professional career of many triumphs. She was called for at the close of her first act, although anxiety and a personal nervousness wholly independent of the character itself had plainly hampered the actress; and after every subsequent act there were calls and recalls, and call again. At the close of the second and third acts the demand for her presence amounted to a positive enthusiasm in which everybody seemed to share. The support was worthy from first to last. Those among the males who were the more conspicuous from the nature of their assignments were Messrs. Mantell, McDowell, Dubois, Jepson, Herndon, Hurley, and the representative of the valet in the first act, whose name, possibly Desire, we did not catch; while the ladies were most prominent were Ada Monk in her amusing portrait of the Countess and Miss Lucy Pixley, sister of Annie, as the page. Mr. Mantell, who is of the late Charles R. Thorne Jr. school of acting, proved a manly and impressive Loris, and his description, as the lover of Fedora, of the wrong that had led him to kill Fedora's husband was most vividly given, and secured for him a special round of applause at its conclusion. Another who was called for was the blind beggar in port before the curtain. The blind rage of Loris and his hatred of Fedora when he learns that she has been the cause of the death of his mother and brother were also effectively depicted. Mr. Mantell is of much value to a quite effective cast.

AT THE MT. MORRIS THEATRE Oct. 1 "The Diamond Mystery, or the Girl I Love," was given with this cast, which shows the company: Peter Grump; J. W. Burton; Polly Mellon; Daisy Ramsdell; Mary Marshall; Annie Burton; Mrs. Hilderbrand; Mrs. Anthony; Julius Hilderbrand; Harold J. Courtney; Jim Brandon; Norman Campbell; Bland; C. M. Roblee; Charles Sumner; Cyril Scott; Bridget Mahone; Harry Miller; Boone; Frank Jackson; Michael Schoggen; Andrew Jones. Oct. 8, Rose Eytine in "A Winter's Tale" every evening except Saturday, when she will play Nixau in "Oliver Twist." Almee is to play the part of Beatrice in "The Romanoff," while the management of the theatre is profiting thereon, as they are waiting for the public to tire of the "Mulligan" series, so that they can bring forward something different, but not less enjoyable.

It is the old story as to Nixau's Garden. "Excelsior" still continues to make the ticket-speculators happy.

THE REPORT from the London Theatre is that Monday's matinee drew a good house, and we saw a good-sized audience assembled there since the opening. Standing-room week presents the names of the following artists, and they gave an entertainment quite up to the good average demanded in first-class variety theatres: Needham and Kelly, comedians, vocalists and dancers of the rough-and-tumble style; Alf Barker, comedian; Perry and Lulu Ryan in society-ketches; Dan Collier and E. D. Gooding in "The Modern School of Acting;" the Tolly and the Tollys in "The Tollys;" and Hallen and Hart in their musical sketch of "Lollypop;" and Sanders and Dean, negro comedians.

JOSEPH K. EMMET began a week's engagement at the People's Theatre Oct. 1, appearing, supported by his own company, in "Fritz in Ireland." Fritz is evidently as popular as ever in New York, for on Monday night he drew the largest audience seen at this theatre since the opening, standing-room being early in demand. He gave his songs with the vivacity which is so marked a feature of his impersonations when he is at his best, and his singing voice was clear and pleasant to listen to.

THE STANDARD THEATRE is still doing a good business with "The Merry Duchess." On Monday evening the house was well filled in the lower part, notwithstanding the many attractions elsewhere.

FACED BATHOLOMEW'S "EQUINE PARADOX" entertainment drew a good-sized audience to the Cosmopolitan Theatre, where the Professor and his horses began an engagement Oct. 1, the lower part of the house being completely filled. The entertainment was fully as interesting as before, and the admirably trained horses and the Professor received much applause. The horses appear to do everything but talk. They appear in a school-lesson, in a room scene, in a military drill, and do numerous tricks that seem really wonderful. No scene shows their intelligence more plainly than a military drill, in which their movements under the Professor's commands are done quickly and correctly, and in a way that is certain to astonish the spectator by its evidence of skillful training. This entertainment, under John D. Misher's management, is announced for every evening, with matinees on Wednesdays and Saturdays. The prices are fixed at 35c, 50c, and 75c.

THE FLORENCE OPERA HOUSE, which was comfortably filled, Oct. 1, presenting their new comedy "Facts," which was received with approbation in Philadelphia, Pa., the past week, when it was originally acted. Judging by the laughter and applause, which were almost incessant, it must be pronounced successful, and no doubt it will prove a most welcome addition to their repertoire. The stern rules of criticism need not be applied to the farcical comedy, which was excellently written and acted. The role played by Mr. Florence having been built up from the chief character in G. Fawcett Rowe's "Brass," while that interpreted by Mrs. Florence is reminiscent of Mrs. Genl. Gilfoxy. These two characters monopolize the attention of the audience, and as both are capably acted we see no reason why the piece should not prove to be a worthy successor of "The Mighty Dollar," which did not achieve great success under the chief character's hand. Under the artistic manipulation of these competent performers, similar treatment of "Facts" will doubtless produce a like result. "Dombey & Son," with Mr. Florence as Capt. Cuttle, is to be played at the Wednesday matinee, and "Eileen Oge" is underlined for 8, but we think that "Facts" will not be displaced.

"X-SLITZER" was produced by the San Francisco Minstrels Oct. 1, and was highly enjoyed. "It is the story of a woman's love" and is a burlesque of "Excelsior." The one Leon as Progress, the Queen of Light, summons from the earth to gratify the curiosity of Electricity (F. M. Ricardo) and other giddy fairies, three prominent citizens—President Arthur (G. H. Coes), John Kelly (A. C. Moreland) and Ben Butler (G. H. Coes). All were well made-up and cordially greeted. After a brief and witty introduction, the comedy was played, the "Imported" ballet, the "Imported" world, guests by their astounding choreographic movements. Billy Birch as a premier was received with shouts of laughter; and he deserved it, for he is without a rival in that line. Luke Schoolcraft trod closely on his heels—that is, in a popular sense. Leon creditably imitated Mlle. Hoffschuler, and J. M. Woods as the Amazon looked like a giant among pigmies. Master Marston displayed no little agility as the sprite. The termination of the burlesque was marked by the sudden falling of the curtain, which took the audience completely by surprise. The other novelties were "Good-bye, Liza Jane," sung by Luke Schoolcraft; "My Ship's My Home," by H. Boning; "Bob's Advice," by Bob Slavin; "Tidings of Comfort and Joy," by Billy Birch; and a melody by F. Cushman. The house was well filled.

THE LADY DUCES is the latest sensation announced at the Globe Theatre, where a good business is being done. Among the new people this week are Charles Hayes, Harry Thompson, John Deuler, Eva Marsh, Rooney and Thompson, Carrie Duncan, Prof. Angelo and Charles Miller.

HARRY MINER has purchased a four-fifths interest in the land upon which the People's Theatre stands for $136,000.

THE THIRD-AVENUE THEATRE on Oct. 1 presented McKee Rankin in "Forty-nine." The attendance was the lightest since the theatre opened, there being scarcely more than half a house.

THE REGULAR SEASON of the Fifth-avenue Theatre, under the management of John Stetson, is to be opened Oct. 8 with "Money," Charles Cogan making his reappearance in America at the Fifth-avenue Theatre. M. B. Cogan is a fair business at the Olympic Theatre, St. Louis, the past week. He is in Cincinnati this week; Pittsburg next. Denman Thompson is drawing crowds to the Olympic this week, on account of the Fair. The Union-square Theatre Company follow Oct. 7.

GUS WILLIAMS did a good business at the People's Theatre, St. Louis, last week, going to Crawfordsville, Ind., Oct. 1, Monday 2, 3, Columbus, O., 4, 5, 6, Springfield, Mo., Delaware, Pa., Bellefontaine, Mo., Urbana, Mo., Richmond 12, Dayton 13. The Jesse James combination is at People's this week; "The French Spy" Combination 7.

LOUISE SYLVESTER drew only fair houses to Standard Theatre, St. Louis, after the first night's presentation of "A Mountain Pink." She was announced to play in Little Rock Oct. 1, Hot Springs 2, Texarkana 3, Shreveport 4. Ida Siddons' Burlesque Combination is at Standard Theatre this week; Winnett & Haley's Trifling Combination 7.

AN ENTIRELY NEW PLAY entitled "A Friend" was presented at the Pickwick Theatre, St. Louis, Sept. 30, further particulars of which will be found in our "Latest News" by Telegraph.

The company consists of Florence M. Gerald, Marjorie Clarke, H. Unit Owens, J. W. Saunders, W. Sage, Hugh Elrick, Frank Percy, Jennie Lewis and Nellie Billings. Marjorie Clarke is manager, W. B. Page treasurer, H. Unit Owens stage-manager, and J. T. Milling advance-agent. THE ORIGINAL WICKLOW HUNTERS, MULLELLY AND MORELAND.
The finest and most finished act now before the public; and why? Because the performers and managers say so. Our make-up and ideas are an infringement on none. NOTICE to managers and performers, also in reply to the two jump-over-the-fence performers: We mention facts. John McCarthy, I would call your attention to the time when you worked for me at the Canterbury, yourself and wife, in Cincinnati, for the very extraordinary salary of one dollar per night. How I took pity on you, using my influence with the proprietor in your behalf, and also did a turn with you, and by so doing kept you to work two weeks. You say you did not advertise your act because you were too well known. Well, we have inquired of most everyone, and find but one person that knows you, and he says that there is not a ghost of a chance of your ever becoming a performer of our standing, which we know to be true. For further gratification we publish the following letter, received by us from two parties whose names you used in your first advertisement:
INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 18, 1883.
DEAR FRIENDS.—We read your epistle in THE CLIPPER, and agree with you. We are glad you used so much judgment, and the parties referred to used our names, as well as many others, without our consent. They also copied our style of make-up as well as your act, but they are not capable of doing it, and will not play first-class houses. Best wishes. Yours respectfully,
J. J. MULLEN and KITTIE MILLER, Zoo Theatre, Indianapolis.
When you fall to get along on imitated acts and copied make-ups, come back to your former place in Cincinnati, and remember when you are talking to Barney Mullellly you are addressing a performer and gentleman, with a thousand friends in this business to your one. You speak of missing links, but show us a closer resemblance to the monkey that is caged in the Zoological Garden in Cincinnati than you are. Why, little boy, should he escape, you would be captured and re-caged. Henceforth, you will be known as Jocko, the Brazilian Ape. Well, we don't care about making a reputation for you, but will settle all disputes when we meet you in person, and hope that fate will favor us with the opportunity before long.
We, the undersigned, cheerfully recommend Messrs. Mullellly and Moreland and their specialty. The act is different from any we have ever seen. It is strictly first-class in every feature. The above are gentlemen and artists. We would also recommend Messrs. Mullellly and Moreland as drawing cards for any first-class house. Signatures—DONNELLY and DREW, LILLIE CARROLL, MALVILLE AND FRANCIS, DUTCH ANDY AMANN, JORIE AMANN, WILEY HAMILTON and MISS LULU WILEY, CONNORS and KELLY.
N. B.—I know these people as gentlemen on and off the stage, and as artists they are strictly first-class, and big cards for first-class houses only.
HARRY FIELDING, Stage-manager
J. S. RAYNOR, Manager. Walnut-street Theatre
We know who you are now, and will answer no more cards, as we consider you beneath our notice. Use no more personalities, or we will let the public know something you would not like to hear.
With regards to our many friends, we remain respectfully,
MULLELLY AND MORELAND.

A large, ornate metal ring with a decorative, scrolled design and a central rectangular label. The ring is shown from a top-down perspective, highlighting its intricate details and the central label.

After many years of labor and experiment, we have at last brought to perfection a NEW WATCH. It is a Key Winding Watch with the celebrated Another Lever movement. Expansion bands. Fully jeweled. They are made of the best materials. It is the only watch so made. Insured gold filled. The Gold is made of our Celebrated Composition metal known as Aluminum Gold. This metal has a sufficient amount of gold in the composition to give it the same color as genuine gold. The Gold cannot be told from a genuine Gold Watch except by the best judges as the metal stands the acid test as well as pure gold. The case is finely engraved and the hands are made of steel and strong and very handsome making it just the watch for Railroad men, Mechanics and all laboring men who require a good accurate and secure time piece. It is superior to any watch ever before offered. They can be sold readily for $15 and can be traded on as readily as for these amounts. Farmers as well as Agents can handle these watches to advantage, as they can be easily exchanged for stock or goods. We will sell the watch free by receipt on receipt of $1.00 on account; the balance can be paid at the express office. We also have very fine Aluminum Gold Watches for $1.00 each. Boston Charles 50 cents. We have hundreds of testimonials, but have room for only two.

It is seldom that we meet with an article that so fully corresponds with its advertised good qualities as does the New American Lever Watch. It has the advantage of being made of that precious metal Aluminum Gold; its works are of the best make, and the general style of the case rank it with the best Watches made anywhere. We recommend it to our readers as a Watch that will give entire satisfaction.

of the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia, has devised a much-needed appliance for reducing the noise in rooms, and a patent has been granted him for it. Almost every player who has consideration for others and really enjoys such, has been made to suffer in consequence of the mania his neighboring players have had for hammering their cue upon the floor, as if to beat time when they have failed to beat their antagonist. Cerahan stops this racket by a simple device that he attaches to the butt of the cue. As he describes it in his letter, his invention, despite its amazing simplicity, is something new, better and more useful. Cerahan conceived the idea because he had failed to get the thing itself, or substitute for it from the billiard manufacturers. He has decided to fix the price one dollar a dozen."—NEW YORK CLIPPER.

The Teutonic Eccentric TIN-PAN FIELDS

AT

FOURTH-STREET OPERA-HOUSE,
ST. LOUIS.

It is with sincere pleasure that I recommend to all Managers the truly Original and wonderful Act done by Mr. Fields. The word original is a common one upon the playbills, but this Act is the first one that I have seen in many years that fully deserves the term ORIGINAL. It has cost Mr. Fields eight years of constant practice to accomplish this extremely difficult feat, and he can feel secure in the possession of his Act, as it cannot be stolen by the ECCENTRIC GENTLEMEN in our Profession who earn their daily bread by stealing that which has been invented by Artists of Ability. I consider Tin-pan Fields' Specialty One of the Strongest Novelties in the Profession.

E. M. HALL IN ENGLAND

THE LEADING BANJOIST OF TWO CONTINENTS.

READ.

The ordinary idea of the banjo is merely that of an instrument adapted to fill up with a few simple chords the pauses in a song for chorus, and also to guide the ear of singers who have not had much vocal training. That it was possible to play difficult and elaborate solos, airs with variations, etc., few would imagine, but Mr. E. M. Hall appears to have discovered quite new capabilities in the banjo as a solo instrument. It is positively startling to hear the varied and original effects he produces. The banjo in his hands is like the violin under the fingers of a Paganini, or the pianoforte under the manipulation of Rubinstein or Von Bulow. We do not pretend to equal these instruments in the quality of tone, but the powers of execution on this simple instrument have been wonderfully enlarged by the skill of the performer, whose solos have a certain artistic grace and delicacy of style one could hardly have expected. We can testify to the brilliant success Mr. Hall has achieved in a performance as pleasing as it is wonderful.

Among those to whom we listened on the evening now referred to none pleased us better than Mr. E. M. Hall, who is described as America's leading banjoist. We have before alluded to the marvelous skill with which this dusky gentleman manipulates the strings of the instrument mentioned; but we cannot refrain from giving him further commendation. Such banjo playing as he gives has never before been heard, and it should be said that a thorough musician who sat next to us was most enthusiastic in his praises, and that the audience generally were moved to acclamation, and recalled the clever artist again and again. Those who listen to Mr. Hall's imitation of a military band will wonder much at the extraordinary volume of sound and at the completeness of the harmony to be extracted from the much-decried banjo.
